more be impugned than the virtue of a woman."

A tear coursed down the check of the witness. He restrained himself with difficulty. He then continued dramatically:

"I wanted to hurl back the charges so that men might believe me. I thought of no disrespect. I only wanted men to know me honest. I believe they know it now. Before God, on the honor of a man, never a cent from my office soiled my fingers. I have not money enough to-day," he said, turning to his attorney, "to pay you your fee.

turning to his attorney, "to pay your fee.
"I could not else, a like it is could not sleep. I could not sleep. I could hardly restrain myself from doing what men did under such circumstances, when I was a boy. I went before the board feeling that I had to say something in such a way that the press and the people would believe my press had condenned me as corrupt, as a wholesale murderer for purposes of gain."

Col. Davis to help ellminate the matter complained of:
Attorney Worthington then stopped because of the absence of witnesses. Judge Advocate Davis was authorized to invite the secretary of war to appear Priday, and the court adjourned. It was evident that Eagan's testimony had made quite an impression. Wednesday they treated him formally; Thursday, at the exclusion of many than the court season, they pressed forward and a number abook him cordially by the hand.

When the court convened at noon, Mr. Garland resumed an argument in the case of Towson vs. Moore, which had begun Thursday. There was a full beach, with the exception of Justices Brewer and White. Mr. Garland spoke calmly and with no evidences of a gitation. He had read from a law volume and had followed with the sentence "This, your honors, is our contention." As the last word was uttered Mr. Garland was seen to raise his hand, and then gasp. He tottered and fell sidewise, striking against a chair and overturning it as he fell heavily to the floor.
